Straight from the Source Executive Summary

Since our founding in 1998, KID has been frustrated with the secrecy at the US Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC). Consumer reports of product related incidents or injuries were kept secret until and unless there was a recall. By that time, too many other consumers are using the product and may have been injured. As part of the Consumer Product Safety Improvement Act of 2008 (CPSIA) passed in 2008, Congress mandated that CPSC set up a public database – allowing consumers to report incidents and to review reports from others. CPSC worked hard to set up a system that provided information in a timely manner, while maintaining the veracity of the reports. This summer, KID looked at the first four months of data from the system in Straight from the Source: An analysis of the reports on children's products at Saferproducts.gov. Our findings include:

- About 20% of the reports to CPSC during the period involve children's products or injuries to children.
- Injuries were reported in 44% of the incidents involving children. Thirty percent of those reports involved injuries requiring medical treatment and 2% involved a death (7).
- One might expect reports of injuries from higher risk products such as trampolines and pogo sticks and there were many. But, the injuries reported were for product failures, not just from use or misuse of the product. Consumers are using the database for its intended purpose – to alert CPSC and others to product defects or hazards.
- Most alarmingly, many of the reports and injuries involved products that had been recalled. One in seven reports involved a recalled product, with most of the incidents happening after the product was recalled.

KID has long maintained that an ineffective recall system leaves dangerous products in consumers' hands. The data in SaferProducts.gov bears that out. With new standards, testing requirements and attention to safety reducing the number of recalls needed, CPSC and advocates can turn their attention to making those that do happen more effective.

Introduction

SaferProducts.gov is the publically available consumer product safety information database of the U.S Consumer Product Safety Commission, or CPSC. Launched in March 2011, the site allows consumers to report hazard complaints with products as well as review other product safety reports before purchasing an item. SaferProducts.gov was mandated under the Consumer Product Safety Improvement Act (CPSIA) passed in 2008 after flaws in the product safety system came to light through a series of recalls and news reports. Consumers and others with knowledge of an incident can submit reports, which include information on the product and the manufacturer, as well as a description of the incident. Manufacturers then have ten days to respond to the complaint before the report is made public. Since its launch, SaferProducts.gov has seen over 2,000 reports with over 400 of the reports referring to children's products.

This report examines the database filings on products affecting children from April 1, 2011 to August 4, 2011 to identify injury patterns from the data and action steps needed.

Report

Methodology

KID downloaded the 2,432 reports released between April 1, 2011 and August 4, 2011 and then went through each report, carefully separating the reports on children's products or products that were hazardous for children from all other reports. KID then checked the CPSC website for each children's product mentioned to see if that product had been recalled. KID also looked for multiple reports on the same model (since the model number is not always included in the report) and noted any repeat offenders.

The information in this report was culled from primary source consumer reports submitted to SaferProducts.gov. It does not include subsequent information CPSC may find in an investigation. To avoid using words such as 'reported' and 'alleged' repeatedly, this caveat applies to the full report.

Category Definitions

In reviewing the data, KID used the following categories:

General Products Jewelry
Art & School Supplies Nursery

Clothing Outdoor & Sports

Diapers Toys
Furniture Other

General Products refer to products for the general public that were reported for potential harm to children, such as a detergent without a child safety cap. Diapers were separated because of a large number of reports from a specific brand. Nursery refers to products used in the care of infants and toddlers such as strollers, cribs, baby jumpers, baby exercisers, high chairs, and pacifiers. Other refers to products that did not fit in any other category—such as outlet covers to prevent a shock hazard.

Initial Findings

Approximately 20% of the reports during the period studied referred to children's products or products that were harmful to children. Forty-three percent of these reports involved nursery products and 25% named toys. The chart below shows the additional categories as well.

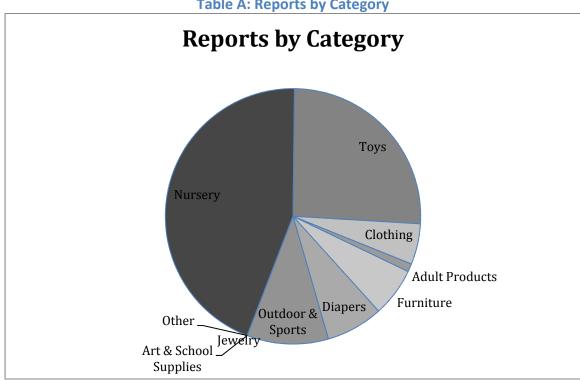

Table A: Reports by Category

Ages affected

Of the reports involving children or children's products, 22% did not list an age of the child. The reports were broken up into age categories representing infants and toddlers (0-2), preschoolers (3-5), school-age children (6-12), teens (13-19) and adults (20+). Only 15% of the reports were for ages six and up. Fifty percent of the reports were for incidents involving children under 3. The chart below shows the age breakdown of the reports.

Reports by Age no info 22% Adults. 0-2 5% Teens 50% 1% 6-12 9% 3-5 13%

Table B: Reports by Age

Injuries and Deaths

Forty-four percent of the incidents included a reported injury or a death. Sixty-eight percent of the injuries were minor, 30% required treatment and 2% resulted in death. See table below for injury breakdown by age.

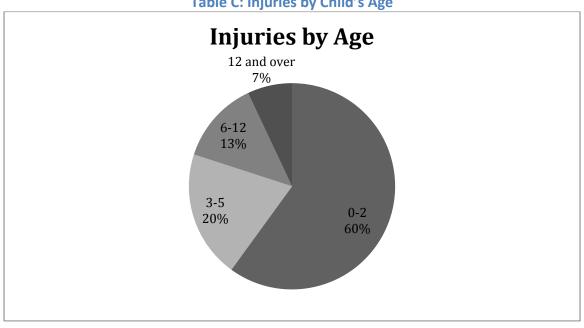

Table C: Injuries by Child's Age

Sixty percent of incidents resulting in an injury or a death affected children under 3. Twenty percent of the incidents affected 3-5 year olds, 13% school age children and 7% over 12.

Below is a listing of the number of reports in each category (both recalled and not) and the number of people they have injured.

Apparent vs. Unexpected Risks

While it is quite common for children to get hurt when playing with toys such as pogo sticks, trampolines, and swing sets, the products reported on SaferProducts.gov caused children injury because of product failure. Take, for example, the recalled Bravo Rocket Pogo Stick, reported 11 times. The reports described screws falling out, the bottom of the stick falling off, and the top part of the stick breaking off. These incidents caused lacerations and bruises. Stretched out springs on the recalled Bravo Variflex trampoline caused a child to hit his head when jumping on the trampoline. Two recalled swing sets were unstable and unsafe for children to play on. While some people might be prone to dismiss some of the injuries children incurred to inherent risk of the product, the fact of the matter is that many of these products had design or manufacturing flaws that added dangers that could not be anticipated.

Recalled Products

Fourteen percent of the reports involved recalled products. Most (57%) of incidents that occurred with recalled products occurred after the product had been recalled; in at least one case, eight years after the recall was announced.

Only one report states that the consumer was knowingly using a recalled product. In many of the cases, consumers only learned that their item had been recalled after an incident. It is quite possible that many of the consumers may still not know of the recall – certainly consumers reading the reports cannot always easily identify already recalled products. Companies may neglect to mention the recall in their response or do not respond. Take for example three reports on Dream on Me cribs #625 and #621 in which the recall is not mentioned in the company's response.

Almost half the incidences involving recalled products reported some kind of injury. Three resulted in a death.

Below is a chart listing the number of products incidents in each category and the number of people they've injured:

Table F: Incidents of Recalled Products per Category; Including Injuries and Deaths

Repeat Offenders

As KID examined the reports on children products at SaferProducts.gov, patterns began to emerge. There are repeat product offenders; certain toys, diapers, and pacifiers come up in multiple reports. There are also repeat companies, companies that have had many different products recalled. Below are a few lists of repeat offenders: products and companies.

Companies listed above have five or more models reported. There are other companies in the database who have more than one model reported, but less than five.

Manufacturer Response

Forty-eight percent of the reports received a company comment. Some use it to provide useful information, such as that the product was recalled or how to contact customer service. Others seem to have a standard response – at least it lets consumers know they looked at the report. And not a few use it to chastise the reporter for misuse of the product.

Conclusion

This report provides just a glimpse at the rich data contained within this new safety resource. The database will be even more useful in identifying hazard patterns when there are years, instead of just months, of reports. Based on the information and analysis, Kids In Danger recommends:

- CPSC work to integrate other information from their site into the database. Any report on a recalled product should have an immediate link to the recall notice. This will not only help the original reporter, but give anyone looking at the report the information they need to avoid injury.
- CPSC, manufacturers, retailers and consumer organizations work together to improve recall effectiveness. With one out of seven reports involving a recalled product, the database clearly shows the need to do a better job reaching consumers.
- Continued work to publicize SaferProducts.gov to consumers and businesses is needed to increase its effectiveness.
- At the one year mark, CPSC should solicit input from those who have used it to report a problem, as a manufacturer, or for research to look for ways to improve its usefulness. The GAO report due to Congress next month should also provide insight.
