Halloween Safety Precautions

Halloween can be a very exciting time, but there are certain products and hazards you should be aware of as you prepare for this year's festivities.

Halloween decorations like Jack O'Lanterns and decorative candles are great fun, but represent very dangerous fire hazards when you have children in costumes playing around them. Accidents can happen: In 2007, a 7-year-old from Connecticut was severely burned when his costume caught fire. Always make sure that your children's costumes are tight fitting and made of flame-resistant fabrics like nylon or polyester.

Also, keep in mind that the cheap, seasonal accessories we buy for this one-night celebration are occasionally hazardous. For example, Halloween flashlights (pictured at right) by Target have just been found to pose burn/fire hazards because they overheat. A recall has not yet been issued for these items, but Target is pulling them from the shelves and is offering a refund to anyone who has purchased them. You should check the list of recalls at www.cpsc.gov frequently in the weeks leading up to Halloween or sign up to receive alerts.
